Outlook 'horrific' for solving murders if funding lags: Police

Police's serious crimes units could be hampered by potential budget cuts: Union head ◐ 70 families left searching for answers

Some families of Calgary murder victims may never find closure should city council approves an operating budget with proposed police-funding shortfalls, some law-enforcement proponents suggest.

Much talk surrounding potential losses in police resources has focused on day-to-day, frontline operations, but homicide investigators are quick to point out they are still working on 70 outstanding files — more than half of which stem from incidents in the last five years.

While homicide-case clearance rates remain sound — up to 90 per cent in some years — now is not the time to slow down, said major crimes Insp. Cliff O'Brien.

"We still have some killers out there we need to bring to courts.... To slide back would be horrific, frankly," he said.

Both Calgary's police chief and police commission chair made their fears known last week about proposed belt-tightening requested by city administration.

The preliminary draft of the 2012-2014 city budget includes a police commission recommendation for a $5.1-million boost to reverse proposed cuts this year, and officials indicated they plan to ask for another $18.3 million in the next three years to hire 122 officers.

Calgary Police Association president John Dooks said he fears units dealing with serious crimes could be overwhelmed in years ahead.

"It's just the facts of life — you can't do more with less," he said.

O'Brien noted that along with putting dangerous individuals behind bars, the homicide unit also serves to provide an important resolution for friends and family of victims.

Andria Teather's 22-year-old son Allan was shot dead in a Calgary parkade in 2008.

She has become an outspoken anti-crime advocate since the tragedy and says overall support for policing and external crime-prevention efforts is critical.

"There are root causes that aren't being addressed, and I think the police are having to deal with that," she said.

▶ Suspicious deaths. Police Insp. Cliff O'Brien said while the police homicide unit has only worked on eight official homicides this year, they have been involved in 80 files total — including numerous unexplained or suspicious deaths — and also frequently assist with other agencies' investigations.

Occupy tents still standing

Campers indicated yesterday they may seek an injunction to prevent eviction Calgary Emergency Management Agency is no longer making decisions related to the protest

KATIE TURNER
@METRONEWS.CA

Occupy Calgary tents will likely remain standing in Olympic Plaza despite a 24-hour eviction ultimatum issued by the city.

Bylaw officers and accompanying members of the Calgary Police Service arrived at Olympic Plaza shortly after 11 a.m. yesterday and began passing out warnings.

"Tent structure must be removed within 24 hours or (it) will be impounded," Tyler, 19, read from his notice.

He and several other occupiers including James Bullock, 21, said they have no plans to vacate the plaza.

"It doesn't scare us," said Bullock. "It brings us together."

Failure to move the tents will lead to court appearance tickets, according to Animal and Bylaw Services director Bill Bruce.

"We'll put the matter before the courts," said Bruce, adding they didn't remove any tents yesterday because they were all claimed by occupants.

"We're not trying to escalate this to a major confrontation."

Ald. Diane Colley-Urquhart, a vocal critic of the way the city has handled the Occupy movement, said she's glad to see bylaw services take action.

"The sooner the better," she said yesterday. "I'd be happy if they got wiped out of here tonight."

Christian group tests city hall's tolerance

KATIE TURNER
@METRONEWS.CA

Taking a page from Occupy Calgary's book, members of the Christian community gathered at city hall yesterday to test their own limits of expression.

"Last week, Occupy Calgary came out and they had a Buddhist, sort of Tibetan, ceremony here in the lobby, with meditation and everything else, and it seemed to go well," said Jim Blake, chairman of Concerned Christians Canada.

"So that's why we're here today, to see if that climate and openness is still here at city hall."

The group sang gospel songs, recited scripture and prayed for mercy upon anyone who has come against the Christian community, including members of council and the city's legal department.

City spokesperson for corporate properties Kerry Joyes said anyone is free to congregate within the atrium of city hall, as it's a public space.

"As long as there is no obstructive or destructive behaviour, they're free to do that."

Ald. Ray Jones, however, said this could open the door to more groups.

"It seems like we're becoming a little more touchy-feely nowadays," he said.

COURT

Paxton won't testify

Dustin Paxton will not be testifying in his own defence at his torture trial.

Lawyer Jim Lutz told a Calgary court yesterday he will be calling no witnesses in the trial, which is now in its eighth week.

Paxton, 31, is charged with aggravated assault, forcible confinement and sexual assault. His alleged victim has detailed how he was beaten daily, forced to perform sexual acts and starved over a two-year period when he and Paxton were business partners and roommates.

The man was battered, bruised and severely malnourished when he was dropped off at a Regina hospital in April 2010.

The Crown also wrapped up its case.

Killer's pricey bike stolen

Custom motorcycle was locked in the garage of a southeast home

JEREMY NOLAIS
@METRONEWS.CA

Thieves have snatched a one-of-a-kind motorcycle from the home of a convicted killer out on parole.

In late August, the garage of a Queensland home belonging to Richard Ferber was broken into and someone made off with his prized, custom-made bike, valued at $60,000.

"Everybody that I know knew I was pretty proud of that thing and wouldn't think about taking it," he said yesterday.

Ferber was previously convicted in the 1980s murder of his estranged wife. After shooting Patricia Ferber five times, court heard Richard Ferber took his sons to McDonald's. One of those boys, Lukas Ferber, was also charged earlier this year after police intervened ahead of an alleged murder-for-hire, and he previously served a sentence for charging criminal interest rates.

Police Const. Wayne Suffesick said the motorcycle theft appears targeted.

Minister: Teen posed as cop

A teen that allegedly posed as a police officer, by driving behind a motorist on St. Albert Trail with flashing red and blue lights, got an education he likely didn't expect.

Alberta Education Minister Thomas Lukaszuk said he pulled over Monday when he saw what he thought was a police vehicle flashing its lights behind him.

When he saw the occupants were two young males, he cornered them and waited for RCMP.

"I think they had a bit of a scare of their life and RCMP will handle this professionally," Lukaszuk said, calling the incident "a total error in judgment."

RCMP said charges are under review against the 18-year-old St. Albert driver.

BATTLE OF THE BLADES

Prize leaves local group ecstatic

Families with sick children staying in Calgary will reap the benefits of a dedicated effort by two Olympic champions.

David Pelletier and partner Tessa Bonhomme saw their figure skating mission through Monday night, winning this season's edition of CBC's Battle of the Blades.

Prior to the competition, Pelletier pledged to give his $50,000 cash prize to Ronald McDonald House Southern Alberta, leading to a whirlwind voting effort by the group's staff and supporters.

"I don't know how many times we all clicked that vote button on Facebook, but just to see them win was phenomenal for us," said Larry Mathieson, Ronald McDonald House executive director for Alberta.

Economy, influx of worthy charities likely explanations for $40K shortfall

Remembrance Day may have come and gone but donations for veterans are still needed, says the head of Calgary's Poppy Fund.

Joey Bleviss said donations are still being accepted, but it appears the fund is $40,000 short compared with this time last year.

Bleviss said he understands there are a number of worthy charitable organizations and local corporations are often forced to make tough decisions on where to lend their support. Nevertheless, he hopes donations will continue to pour in.

"We have to give back to those that gave to us," he said.

Can't 'evict an idea': Occupy T.O.

A judge says Occupy Toronto protesters can remain in a downtown park while the merits of a city eviction order are argued in court.

Occupy Toronto protesters went to court yesterday after receiving the eviction notices and are requesting an injunction against the eviction.

The judge says the protesters can't be removed pending his decision following arguments on Friday, but added that no new structures can be erected in the park.

As police looked on, by-law officers threaded their way between tents and through the mud yesterday morning to put up the notices, which were quickly taken down.

The protesters said the city could not "evict an idea" whose time had come, and they said they planned to stay.

But some demonstrators said they would leave rather than risk confrontation with police and possible criminal charges.

The protesters took over the park several blocks east of Bay Street on Oct. 15.

Ouster raises doubts about Occupy future

New York City protesters gather to discuss options to sustain movement

Crackdowns against the Occupy Wall Street encampments across the country reached the epicenter of the movement yesterday, when police rousted protesters from a Manhattan park and a judge ruled that their free speech rights do not extend to pitching a tent and setting up camp for months at a time.

It was a potentially devastating setback. If crowds of demonstrators return to Zuccotti Park, they will not be allowed to bring tents, sleeping bags and other equipment that turned the area into a makeshift city of dissent.

But demonstrators pledged to carry on with their message protesting corporate greed and economic inequality, either in Zuccotti or a yet-to-be chosen new home.

"This is much bigger than a square plaza in downtown Manhattan," said Hans Shan, an organizer who was working with churches to find places for protesters to sleep.

State Supreme Court Justice Michael Stallman upheld the city's eviction of the protesters after an emergency appeal by the National Lawyers Guild.

The protesters have been camped out in the privately owned park since mid-September.

Judge's ruling

- Supreme Court Justice Michael Stallman denied a motion by the demonstrators seeking to be allowed back into the park with their tents and sleeping bags.
- The protesters "have not demonstrated that they have a First Amendment right to remain in Zuccotti Park, along with their tents, structures, generators and other installations to the exclusion of the owner's reasonable rights ... or to the rights to public access of others who might wish to use the space safely," Stallman wrote.

Memo warns of illegal arms trade

Minister quick to dismiss own department's analysis on ending registry of rifles and shotguns

Scrapping the requirement to register rifles and shotguns could fuel illegal firearms trafficking across the Canadian border, warns an internal federal memo.

It says the move would weaken import controls by eliminating a requirement for border officials to verify firearms coming into the country.

"Such a loophole could facilitate unregistered prohibited and restricted firearm trafficking into and through Canada," says the declassified memo, originally marked secret.

The memo was released under the Access to Information Act to the National Firearms Association and posted along with hundreds of other pages on the organization's website.

It was prepared by Mark Potter, a senior Public Safety Department official, for an assistant deputy minister as Parliament was debating a private member's bill to kill the registry.

THE CANADIAN PRESS

Law enforcement

- The Public Safety memo also says elimination of the registry would "significantly compromise" law enforcement's ability to trace firearms in Canada — for instance, linking a weapon left at a crime scene with an individual owner — or to support foreign police forces trying to do the same.

Two U.S. men were executed yesterday, one for killing his three sleeping sons, the other for killing a woman and her two daughters after they visited Disney World.

In Ohio, Reginald Brooks of East Cleveland who fatally shot his three sons while they slept in 1982, shortly after his wife filed for divorce, was executed with each of his hands clenched in an obscene gesture.

In Florida, Oba Chandler was executed for killing an Ohio woman and her two teenage daughters in June 1989 as the victims returned from a dream vacation to Disney World.

Brooks died at 2:04 p.m. local time. Chandler, 65, was administered a lethal injection and pronounced dead at 4:25 p.m. local time yesterday.

Route to change for oil pipeline

Nebraska conducts own environmental assessment
Cost and kilometres added to project undetermined

TransCanada Corp. says it has reached an agreement with the Nebraska government to change the route of its proposed Keystone XL oil pipeline to avoid the ecologically sensitive Sandhills region.

The Calgary-based pipeline giant said it supports Nebraska legislation that ensures the pipeline doesn't cross the expanse of grass-strewn, loose-soil hills, and part of the Ogallala aquifer, which supplies water to Nebraska and seven other states.

The 2,700-kilometre, $7-billion US pipeline, if built, will carry crude from Alberta's oilsands to refineries on the U.S. Gulf Coast, traversing six states along the way.

Heated opposition has come from Nebraska, where many residents were concerned a spill could pollute water used for farming and ranching.

Last week, the U.S. State Department announced it would delay its decision until early 2013 so a new route could be established.

The U.S. State Department has final say on Keystone XL because it would cross an international border. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Route review

- Alex Pourbaix, TransCanada's president of energy and oil pipelines, said he expects the review will add six to nine months to the Keystone XL schedule.
- But a State Department spokesman said that any new route would require a supplemental environmental-impact statement that likely would take more than a year to complete.

UNEMPLOYMENT

EI a failing system: Report

A new report says the Employment Insurance system is broken and needs a more transparent, effective and equitable national framework.

The report by a task force from the University of Toronto's Mowat Centre says the EI system is complex, opaque and not easily understood by contributors. It says the current program has failed to keep up with societal and economic change.

Too many are being left out of the social safety net, carrying an unfair burden or not achieving their potential, it says. The task force found only 46 per cent of the country's unemployed received EI benefits last year, compared with 86 per cent in 1981.

Charge per user, not for usage: CRTC

Decision reverses plan to use limited-usage pricing models on smaller Internet providers

The federal telecommunications regulator has rejected a controversial plan that would have allowed the big phone and cable companies to impose a usage-based billing model on Internet service resellers, a system that the Conservative government and many consumers had opposed.

The Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission's decision yesterday instead gives the companies a choice of either charging the smaller Internet providers a flat rate per user or selling the ISPs a specific amount of capacity on their networks.

"The net effect of it is that there will be no caps, no limitations, no metering of use for retail customers as a result of this CRTC decision," CRTC chairman Konrad von Finckenstein said.

The regulator launched its review after a social media campaign launched by the ISPs and an ensuing public backlash, as well as urging by former industry minister Tony Clement.

Under the new capacity model for billing, a small ISP buys a certain amount of network capacity from one of the big providers, and if its customers unexpectedly increase their usage, their service could slow.

"If they buy too little they have a problem with their end customers, if they buy too much they pay for something that they don't use," von Finckenstein said.

Industry Minister Christian Paradis said the government would study the decision carefully to ensure it stimulated competition and investment and allowed Canadians to choose. "Let me be clear: our government's policy will always be to encourage competition, ensure consumer choice and minimize regulation," he said in a statement last night.

Independent Internet service provider TekSavvy was pleased with the structure, but said the actual rates will increase costs for consumers. "The rates approved by the commission today will make it much harder for independent ISPs to compete," TekSavvy CEO Marc Gaudrault said. "This is an unfortunate development for telecommunications competition in Canada." THE CANADIAN PRESS

DAD'S DOING DOUBLE DUTY

JUST SAYIN' ...

NEIL MORTON
METRO

Life is full of double standards, and here's one of mine: I can admit I protect (and sometimes micromanage) my daughters, 11 and 9, in a way I probably wouldn't if I had boys.

When I was dating my now-wife in high school — yes, high school sweethearts! — I used to snicker when she had to get home by midnight to turn off her dad's alarm clock. If she didn't beat the alarm, he said he'd go out looking for her, call police, call hospitals. I said I'd never be that kind of dad.

I am that kind of dad. More so because I have girls.

Why? Well, for one thing, I'm fully aware there are boys who will try to take advantage of them. Not all boys, but some.

There are also predators/monsters in the real world and online, enormous pressures around drugs and alcohol, and bullying (in recent weeks, a 10-year-old Illinois girl, Ashlynn Conner, hanged herself after being bullied at school). I know these things apply to boys as well, but I just think the implications are compounded for girls.

"The extent of our bad 'social media' growing up: crank calls and rolled-up pieces of paper (e.g. 'Johnny loves Sarah') passed around class. Now there's the quick distribution of voyeuristic photos from a party that go 'viral ...'"

It's not that I don't trust my daughters. It's that I know what kids are like. I was one. Kids are kids, not adults. They will make mistakes. They will make bad decisions sometimes. There are so many peer pressures.

What I tell my girls is we're instantly accessible whenever they're in a bind. Text us, call us, tweet us — we'll be there. No questions. No judgments. (Well, questions will come later.)

Mobile devices are a blessing for this generation, allowing kids to be much more accessible to their parents if they're in harm's way. But adding social media to the mix does create more trigger points.

The extent of our bad "social media" growing up: crank calls and rolled-up pieces of paper (e.g., "Johnny loves Sarah") passed around class. Now there's the quick distribution of voyeuristic photos from a party that go "viral" and Mean Girl tactics ("You're fat," "You're ugly," "You're Stupid") that don't end in the schoolyard but continue on Facebook.

We let our daughters use social media — there are many virtues to it — but monitor it very closely.

Sure kids have to have some sense of forging an identify outside their parents. We will give ours some line. But my blinders will not be on. Denial and ignorance do no good. As parents, you have to anticipate and react. Particularly with girls.

My angels won't understand all the decisions we make until they have grown into women and parents.

In the meantime, all we can do is protect them — and hopefully empower them at the same time.

Worth Mentioning

Individual debt is rising, savings are eroding and many young people have simply given up, staying home without looking for a job.

They are Italy's invisible poor, unseen by tourists, ignored by the country's fat-cat politicians and living in a reality that's a far cry from former prime minister Silvio Berlusconi's description of an affluent country where "the restaurants are full."

Or in the words of Francesa Zuccari, who runs a soup kitchen in Rome: "There is another city out there where people can't get to the end of the month."

This is the Italy facing Mario Monti, the economics professor tapped to form an interim technocratic government after Berlusconi was forced to resign.

On the one hand, Italy's elite manufacturers are girding for an increase in luxury exports and some wealthy Italians are looking to move their money into the real-estate markets in New York, Miami and Paris. On the other, the state statistics institute says almost 14 per cent of the population are living in "relative poverty."

Trimming the cost of a haircut

One Ohio barber has turned the price of a haircut on its head.

After a mortgage crisis, macro-unemployment, stock-market tumbles and poor consumer confidence, Gregory Burnett is only charging people what they can afford for a haircut, according to the Canton Repository newspaper.

After his usual back-to-school rush failed to show, he put up a sign that says, "TIMES ARE HARD WHAT CAN YOU PAY FOR A CUT."

He has accepted as little as $5 for a regular $12 haircut, the newspaper reports.

The owner of Old School Barber Shop said he named his shop for that mantra.

"Old school is making something out of nothing," Burnett told the Repository.

The 56-year-old has been a working man all his life by doing service jobs: shining shoes, driving cabs, and for the last 25 years he has worked as a hairstylist and barber, the Repository says.

And now that he has his own barber shop, he still shines shoes. Although it's $5, and that's non-negotiable.

Much ado about penguins

From March of the Penguins to Farce of the Penguins to the return of Happy Feet, it's hard to toss a fish without hitting one at the movies But who is the most famous penguin of all?

IN FOCUS

RICHARD CROUSE
SCENE@METRONEWS.CA

At the start of the animated penguin picture Surf's Up, Cody Maverick (the voice of Transformer's star Shia LaBeouf) takes a shot at another cartoon tuxedoed bird movie.

Asked if he has any other skills besides surfing. Cody sarcastically says, "Like what? Singing and dancing?"

Of course, he's referring to Happy Feet, the Oscar winning movie about an Emperor Penguin who can't find his soul mate the usual way — through song — so he uses his other talent — tap dancing.

The musical penguins of Happy Feet shim shammed their way to huge box office in 2006, and will paddle and roll their way back into theatres again this weekend in Happy Feet Two.

For a while, it seemed like you couldn't swing a herring without hitting a penguin at the movies.

March of the Penguins, a real-life look at the migration march of Emperor penguins to their traditional breeding ground, was a left field hit in 2005. The winner for Best Documentary not only out grossed all the nominees for Best Picture that year — it took in $77 million vs. $75 million for Brokeback Mountain — but also became the second highest grossing theatrical documentary after Fahrenheit 9/11.

The musical penguins of Happy Feet shim shammed their way to huge box office in 2006, and will paddle and roll their way back into theatres again this weekend in Happy Feet Two.

It was such a huge hit it inspired an R-rated parody, Farce of the Penguins. Featuring the voices of Samuel L. Jackson, Jason Alexander and Christina Applegate, it's an R-rated spoof that imagines what sex-starved penguins might talk about on the 70 mile walk to their mating grounds.

"I am tired of the club scene," says one penguin. "So are the baby seals!" replies another.

More family friendly was Madagascar, the story of four Central Park Zoo animals who get stranded on the island of Madagascar. The movie featured a large menagerie of characters, but the zoo's penguins, Skipper, Kowalski, Rico and Private, proved to be audience favorites. They have most of the movie's best lines — on landing in Africa one of the flightless birds says, "Africa? That ain't gonna fly!" — and were featured in a short film, The Madagascar Penguins in a Christmas Caper, a TV series and video games.

Probably the most famous penguin character in the movies is Oswald Cobblepot a.k.a. The Penguin, as played by Danny DeVito in Batman Returns.

This super villain is human, but dresses like a penguin, eats raw fish and tries to conquer Gotham with an army of specially trained penguins.

The grandiosity of gore

The Walking Dead has thrust special effects wizards back into the spotlight It's truly a world unto itself

Transforming ordinary humans into flesh-eating, mindless zombies for AMC's monster hit The Walking Dead involves a fair bit of Hollywood magic, to be sure. But makeup master Greg Nicotero orchestrated his own remarkable transformation with a leap to the director's chair for the show's second season.

The special effects wizard — whose diverse slate of movie projects include Inglourious Basterds, The Green Mile, Sin City, The Pacific and the Kill Bill series — helms an upcoming episode that marks a new benchmark in his gruesome career.

The broadening appeal of horror and fantasy fare is helping gross-out geeks like him find notoriety in the mainstream, and even snag high-profile projects of their own, he says.

"I think what's interesting about it is (we're in) a situation where guys who love and respected the genre when they were younger are now well-placed in the industry," Nicotero says in a recent interview from the set of The Walking Dead.

"Between (directors) Sam Raimi and Frank Darabont and Quentin Tarantino, Robert Rodriguez — we all had the same diet when we grew up, and that diet was loving to watch old Ray Harryhausen movies and reading Famous Monsters Magazine. It was just this kind of weird shared existence we all had when we were younger."

HANDOUT

▶ The Walking Dead has become known for its gory effects.

Nicotero and his prolific effects company KNB EFX Group are featured in a new documentary from Canadian filmmaker Donna Davies called Nightmare Factory. It profiles a group of craftsmen who pour their hearts and souls into detailed prosthetics, even as much of the industry is increasingly turning to computer-generated spectacles.

"They can sometimes take six months to build an effect that will be on screen for three seconds."
DONNA DAVIES

"They can sometimes take six months to build an effect that will be on screen for three seconds," Davies says of Nicotero and his partners.

"These are sculptors, painters, artists, line craftsmen — it's not just about sitting down and hitting a button and there it is. And I think you can feel that when you watch the shows."

Davies, whose other TV docs have included Zombiemania and Pretty Bloody: The Women of Horror, was fascinated by the reverence effects artists have for filmmakers who came before them. She notes Nicotero learned his craft from '80s splatter wizard Tom Savini (Friday the 13th, Day of the Living Dead).

"It's a process where you learn under the direction of another master and that doesn't exist in the film industry very much, or in any other industry in the arts as much."

Get off the ledge — Community is not cancelled

Despite rumors that spread like wildfire on the Internet Monday evening, NBC's Community has not been cancelled.

The comedy show, which stars Joel McHale, was not on the NBC's midseason renewal plans, but The Hollywood Reporter said that the show was not cancelled.

After Community enthusiasts started to panic thinking the show was cancelled, Brain Stelter, a New York Times reporter that covers television and digital media tweeted the following:

"Community is definitely not cancelled."

"Community is definitely not cancelled. NYT's Bill Carter says, two cubicles over. 'NBC says it'll be off the air for only a brief time.'"

While the show is on NBC's prime Thursday night slot, it's no secret it's struggling.

According to MSNBC.com the show's most recent airing attracted 3.5 million viewers, which is just short of its season low.

Community airs on Citytv in Canada.

And for those who care to know, Prime Suspect was not cancelled either.

Patti LaBelle accused of screaming at a toddler and punching its mother

If you are a baby and happen to come across singer Patti LaBelle, it's best if you pull up your diaper, grab your rattle, and crawl right out of there.

It was disclosed yesterday in a lawsuit filed in Manhattan Supreme Court that the singer screamed obscenities at a toddler and threw a punch at the baby's mother (who also happens to be a school teacher) sometime this year.

The mother, Roseanna Monk, is now suing LaBelle, who was living in her Manhattan apartment building while appearing on Broadway's Fela. Apparently, this is what happened, according to Monk's lawyer, reports The New York Daily News: The 18-month-old toddler, named Genevieve, was "scampering" around the apartment building's lobby when LaBelle, who is described as being in "full star regalia with oversize shades and a fur coat" became upset at the baby as she walked through.

"'What are you doing letting your kid run around like that?' she reportedly yelled. And then, according to the lawyer yet again, 'started screaming at my client, throwing water from a bottle at the mother's face and the baby's face.'"

As if that wasn't enough, LaBelle then took a swing at the baby's mother.

She then was shoved into a waiting car by her entourage and the baby "violently" threw-up.

So far, LaBelle hasn't responded to the allegations.

She's probably too busy not-babysitting to do so.

And in other baby news...

Christina Applegate might not want to have LaBelle as a guest star on her TV show Up All Night anytime soon.

As she tells The View, having her nine-month-old daughter Sadie around was a priority when deciding to do the new NBC show.

"My whole thing was, 'I'm not doing this unless I can bring her.' So they had to build me a room for her and it's got her toys and a crib and she takes her naps there," the actress explained. "That's called a crazy mother who said, 'No, I'm not doing anything unless I can be with my baby.'"

Matthew Fox in hot water?

An Ohio private bus driver who claims she was punched by Matthew Fox is asking that the actor's lawsuit against her be tossed out. The former star of Lost slapped Heather Bormann with a countersuit earlier this month after she sued him for at least $75,000 US in damages. Fox also demanded a jury trial.

Bormann's attorney filed a motion Monday seeking to have Fox's lawsuit dismissed, calling it frivolous.

In her lawsuit, Bormann alleged that Fox struck her in the breast, groin, arm and legs after she stopped him from boarding her chartered party bus on Aug. 28. Fox was in Cleveland making a movie.

Prosecutors declined to file charges in the case.

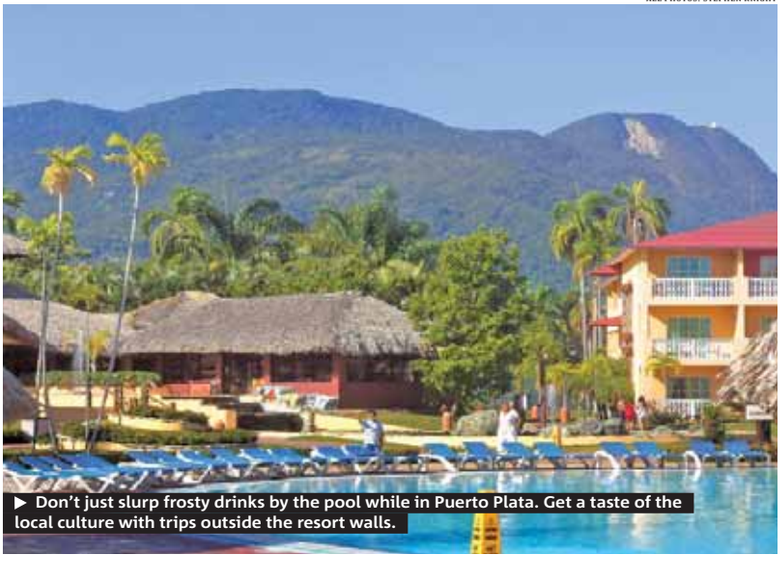
Escape the resort

The beach and a trashy novel are great for a few days, but when tanning gets old, you might want to see what's outside the resort walls Puerto Plata's It Zone has the answer

STEPHEN KNIGHT
LIFE@METRONEWS.CA

ALL PHOTOS: STEPHEN KNIGHT



Don't just slurp frosty drinks by the pool while in Puerto Plata. Get a taste of the local culture with trips outside the resort walls.

We could all use a little quality time in the sun and a dip in the ocean, especially as another long Canadian winter approaches.

But if you're like some of the thousands of Canadian travellers who flock to this Caribbean island nation of 10 million people each year, you want the all-inclusive travel experience to be about more than just sitting around the resort all day with the latest Danielle Steel/John Grisham novel.

That's where the It Zone comes in. Launched in November by Nolitours (a member of Transat A.T. Inc.), the It Zone is designed for travellers to Puerto Plata who enjoy the home base of an all-inclusive resort — ours was the scenic Be Live Grand Marien — but who are eager to get in touch with the local culture, try some outdoor adventure activities and check out the nightlife beyond sports highlights at the hotel bar.

Eat

A recent tour gave a group of Canadian journalists a close-up glimpse of life outside the perimeter, but first we had to fuel up with an intimate dinner at chef Rafael Vásquez Heinsen's Mares Restaurant and Lounge. Vásquez Heinsen's shaded backyard terrace serves as the main dining area, and the lobster is fresh from the ocean that day.

Monkey business

The next day, a short drive outside Puerto Plata, in Sosua, is the Monkey Jungle, run by the husband and wife team of Chuck and Candy Ritzen. The American ex-pats have hit on an innovative business model that contributes to the economy, creates jobs and provides some basic dental and health care to the local population.

Monkey Jungle is home to 15 protected squirrel monkeys and six Capuchin monkeys, with a care provider who was formerly with the Toronto Zoo. You can walk through the squirrel monkey habitat and the curious simians just hop on your shoulders for a ride. It's the first time I've literally had a monkey on my back.

You can also zip-line through seven stations totaling 4,400 feet and, before the last zip, descend on a cable from a platform into a cave; sort of like zip-lining, but vertically. The Ritzens have a self-sustaining operation where they use the profits from the zip-lining and monkey jungle activities to fund the health clinic on the premises.

Sustainable tourism

The idea of sustainable tourism has also been taken up by tour companies. Transat A.T. Inc. partners with SOS Children's Villages, which provides caring, village-style group homes for orphaned, abused or abandoned children. We were given a tour of the village in Santiago de los Caballeros, about an hour from Puerto Plata. The smiling kids were curious, and a spontaneous game of baseball, the national sports obsession, broke out using a stick and a ball of rolled-up tinfoil.

Go big, or go home

If it's true you have to go big or go home, then Ocean World is a must-see before you head back to the Great White North.

Open since 2004, the massive ocean-side complex features interactive activities with dolphins, sharks and stingrays as well as exhibits with everything from tigers to toucans. In terms of size, the place filters six million litres of seawater an hour.

And, if you like a touch of Las Vegas with your sun holiday, then Ocean World has you covered with its full-service casino, disco lounge, and Bravissimo, a glittery song-and-dance revue with more costume changes than a Paris catwalk.

Now put that book down and go!

If you go...

Travel in brief

A new 200-kilometre highway in the Dominican Republic, from the capital Santo Domingo to tourist hot spot Punta Cana, will make it easier for visitors to explore the Caribbean country. The divided highway, which has been under construction for the last four years, was completed earlier this year from Santo Domingo to La Romana on the south coast, significantly reducing travel times between the two cities.

3 WAYS TO DISCOVER THE CITY

BY TRAIN
machupicchutrain.com

- Four operators offer a good service, whether it is from the city of Cusco or from Ollantaytambo. From one-and-a-half to three hours, the journey is fascinating.

BY INCA TRAIL
infocusco.com.pe

- You can depart from the city of Cusco in a route of four days and three nights, going through a stone road built by the incas.

SANCTUARY LODGE HOTEL

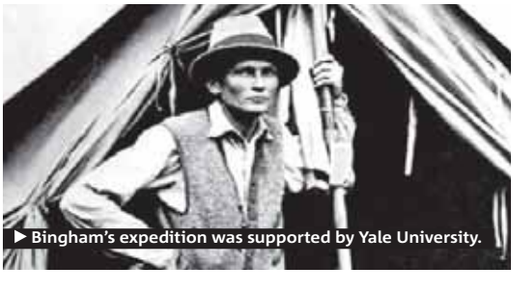
- The only hotel located adjacent to Machu Picchu. Guests have the privilege of seeing the sunrise in Machu Picchu.

The year of the Centenary

This year marks the centenary of the discovery of Machu Picchu.

In 1911, an expedition led by U.S. explorer Hiram Bingham went to the Inca site and gave it international exposure through a special edition of National Geographic magazine, which ran a cover story with the title In the Wonderland of Peru. Since then, Machu Picchu has been a destination for foreign visitors. It's in the Superman comics, Indiana Jones movies and even in an episode of The Simpsons.



▶ Bingham's expedition was supported by Yale University.

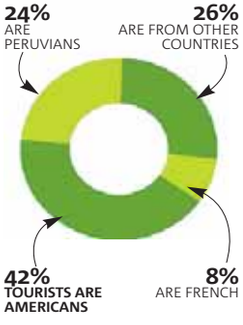
tourists visit Machu Picchu daily. It was declared a site of Cultural Heritage of Humanity in 1983 by Unesco. Recently, Bill Gates, Mick Jagger, Leonardo Di Caprio, Richard Gere, Cameron Diaz and Slavoj Zizek have visited it.



Made of stone

Machu Picchu is the most precious jewel of the Incas' architecture; the empire dominated the South American Highlands until the arrival of the Spaniards in the sixteenth century.

It was built in mid-fifteenth century in an amazing setting — where the Highlands meet the Amazon Jungle — and its perfectly assembled stone walls continue to amaze visitors.

▶ Kitsch decoration and peruvian food.

Fallen Angel a must

It's impossible not to go through the city of Cusco — in Quechua, "the navel of the world"— before going to Machu Picchu. The capital of the Inca Empire is now a cosmopolitan city, home to backpackers, hippies, New Age mystics and yuppies living the best adventure of their lives. It has a great range of hotels and restaurants. Stay at Fallen Angel, with its curious kitsch decor and Novoandina food made with alpaca and guinea pig meat.

Wonder of the modern world

In 2007, Machu Picchu — "Old Mountain" in the language of the Peruvian Andes — became one of the wonders of the modern world, in a poll created by new7wonders.com. The others: The Great Wall (China), Roman Coliseum (Italy), Chichen Itzá (Mexico), Petra (Jordan), the Taj Mahal (India) and Corcovado Christ (Brazil).

- 1 tsp (5 mL) dried oregano leaves
- Pinch each salt and pepper
- 1 tbsp (15 mL) butter

Drink of the week

Hail Caesar

You'll be hard-pressed to find a Caesar outside of Canada, but here it's practically our national drink (it's also great for brunch). And while tomato juice and clam broth might sound like unlikely bedfellows, Clamato is an endlessly adaptable base. The classic Caesar calls for vodka and a celery salt rim, but go ahead and cross the Rubicon with some bold experimentation. Try making one with gin or tequila, add fresh horseradish or beef broth, and garnish with celery, spicy beans or even a chicken wing.

- 1.5 oz bourbon whisky
- 6 dashes Tabasco Sauce
- 6 dashes Worcestershire sauce
- .25 oz lemon juice
- dash of olive brine
- Orange slices
- Clamato, to top

In a highball rimmed with Jamaican jerk spice and filled with ice, add all ingredients but Clamato. Top with Clamato, and stir.

6 ways to give your career some direction

Erin Millar and Ben Coli walk students through their post-secondary journey in The Canadian Campus Connection We combed the book to find top tips to help you improve your job prospects

MARISA BARATTA
TALENTEGG.CA

1 There is more to school than academics

Employers are more impressed with someone who does well in school and outside of it than someone who can boast great marks with no extra-curriculars to show for it. Getting involved on campus demonstrates many traits that are desirable in employers' eyes — time management skills and the ability to multi-task and meet deadlines. It indicates that you possess an interest in the world around you.

2 Plan your career path before you graduate

You shouldn't be expected to know where you want to work when you've only just started university or college. But it's a good idea to make an appointment with your adviser, even if it is to double-check that you're fulfilling your program's requirements. The last thing you want is to discover you have to reschedule your classes or stay back a semester to complete a course.

3 Get to know your professors

You may not love your class. But getting to know your professor could save your career. If you face the common struggle of finding a job after you graduate, your professor could become the strongest reference on your resumé. Who knows you better than the person who saw you every week in class, read your papers and evaluated your work ethic firsthand? And you'll be more interested in what wisdom he or she has to share.

4 Fun electives can boost your resumé

How can a hiring manager forget the promising candidate who, in addition to earning strong marks and joining several clubs, completed a course in video game addiction and the history of gaming at the University of Western Ontario or learned about swing and golf etiquette at Medicine Hat College?

5 Stay healthy — it's important

When it comes down to it, your health matters most. Don't pull an all-nighter, stock up on coffee or force yourself to attend your weekly gym class if you're sick. Stress can take a toll on your health and can create an impact that goes well into your graduate years. Most post-secondary institutions offer a plethora of ways for you to go above preventing illness and into maintaining a healthy state of life.

6 You don't have to choose between university and college

Some programs combine the hands-on, practical experience of college with the theory-based, analytical side of university. Those aspiring to be nurses can opt for a college diploma focusing on skills and experience or a more academic degree from a university. These programs increase a graduate's appeal among employers as their education demonstrates they can thrive in both settings.

PICKING OUT THE PROPER LAWYER FOR YOUR WORKPLACE CASE

WORKPLACE LAW

DANIEL LUBLIN
DAN@CANADAEMPLOYMENTLAWYER.COM
TWITTER: @DANLUBLIN

"Lawyers are the only persons in whom ignorance of the law is not punished." - Jeremy Bentham (1748 - 1832)

How do you win in court? It starts with selecting the proper lawyer. But with countless factors to consider, finding the ideal lawyer to navigate your case can be overwhelming. Here are three cautionary tales.

Advertising
A lawyer's search engine rankings have nothing to do with his or her legal skill. Rather, Internet-based advertising allows lawyers to pay for and then snatch up high rankings on Google that are not indicative of the quality of the lawyer or her firm. Similarly, there are no rules limiting lawyers without much experience in employment law from professing that they practise it, on their websites and in the media, and they often do.

Free consultations
Some lawyers advertise "free" consultations. These can be a sham. A free consultation is usually nothing more than a bait and switch tactic, designed to get you in the door and then convince you to spend money for any substantive work performed afterward.

Oral agreements
The biggest problem most people face with lawyers is their billing practices. This is because the regulatory bodies that oversee lawyers have few restrictions governing how they charge for their work. Lawyers are often left to their own devices, charging clients based on any combination of their time spent or the result obtained.

If asked, a lawyer should predict to the best of his or her ability the potential costs of your case. Then confirm that arrangement in writing.

The Baltimore Orioles are going retro in 2012, bringing back the cartoon bird for their caps as part of a uniform change for the upcoming season.

The new cartoon bird head utilizes elements from the 1970 and 1983 versions. The home cap will feature the bird head on a white front panel with a black back and orange bill and button. The road caps will feature the bird on black with an orange bill and button.

Verlander wins AL Cy Young with ease

There was little question Justin Verlander would unanimously win the AL Cy Young Award. Now, the far more intriguing question: Will he take the MVP, too?

"Do I think it's possible? Yes. Would I like to win it? Of course," he said during a conference call. "It's kind of a weird scenario."

No starting pitcher has won the MVP trophy since Roger Clemens in 1986, with Dennis Eckersley the last reliever to get it in 1992. Many say pitchers shouldn't win the MVP, period, contending they already have their own award.

But Verlander's season — he won the pitching version of the Triple Crown, led Detroit to its first division crown in 24 years and drew every first-place vote yesterday in the Cy Young race — has ratcheted up the debate in a crowded MVP field that includes Curtis Granderson, Jacoby Ellsbury, Jose Bautista, Miguel Cabrera and more.

"Pitchers are on the ballot," Verlander said. Bolstering the case for all pitchers, Verlander pointed to the "tremendous effect we have on the day of our game."

"I'm so different from everybody," he said.

If he doesn't win, Verlander said he'd like to see Granderson, his former teammate, get the award.

Verlander breezed to the Cy Young, much the way the Tigers' ace humbled hitters with his 100 m.p.h. fastball, sharp curve and wicked slider. He led the majors in wins by going 24-5 and topped baseball with 250 strikeouts.

▶ Tom Kostopoulos fights with Ottawa's Zenon Konopka last night.

Struggles continue

- Anderson stops 38, Butler scores twice as Senators defeat Flames
- Calgary has won just twice in its last seven games on home ice

SENATORS	FLAMES

Craig Anderson made 38 saves and Bobby Butler's first two goals of the season last night led the Ottawa Senators to a 3-1 victory over the Calgary Flames.

Butler made a nice toe-drag move against defenceman Mark Giordano, then snapped a shot over the glove of goaltender Miikka Kiprusoff to break a 1-1 tie in the third period.

The 24-year-old forward added his second of the night at 16:12 to make it 3-1 after bursting down the right wing and firing a wrist shot inside the far goal post.

Anderson was also impressive after giving up four goals on six shots and getting pulled against Buffalo last Friday. He has since bounced back with two solid outings — stopping 31-of-33 shots in Ottawa's win Saturday night in Toronto.

Two of his best stops came in the second minute of the game when he stopped Lee Stempniak on close-in chances after he was set up in front by Paul Byron.

Daniel Alfredsson also scored for Ottawa (9-9-1). On the heels of a five-game winless streak, the Senators have won two games in a row as they reach the halfway point of their six-game road trip, which continues tomorrow against the Edmonton Oilers.

Tom Kostopoulos scored the lone goal for Calgary (7-9-1). The Flames had won eight of their previous nine meetings with Ottawa dating back to 2004.

The Flames continue to struggle at home where they've won just twice in their last seven. They host the Chicago Blackhawks on Friday night.

Miikka Kiprusoff had 29 saves for the Flames.

Ottawa opened the scoring at 18:44 of the second period.

When Jarome Iginla couldn't get the puck past Nick Foligno along the side boards, Foligno burst back into the Flames' end on the transition and sent a pass to Alfredsson driving to the slot. With Flames defenceman Chris Butler providing a screen, the Senators captain snapped a shot into the top corner for his fifth goal.

It was another miserable night for the Flames' struggling power-play unit. Calgary went 0-for-6 with the man advantage to fall to an NHL worst 2-for-40 on home ice. During the 64 second two-man advantage, they failed to record a shot on goal. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Engine

The 2012 ZL1's supercharged 6.2-litre V-8 — a variation of the engines found in the Corvette ZR1 and Cadillac CTS-V — is mated to a six-speed manual transmission and dynos at 580 horsepower and 556 pound-feet of torque. This makes it the most powerful production Camaro ever built and, Chevrolet proclaims, will be the most powerful Chevy droptop ever.

The ZL1 constitutes much more than just unbridled horsepower, but represents a thoroughly sorted out performance platform where nearly every component has been beefed up or completely redesigned to handle the engine's hefty output.

Cabin

Both driver and their front passenger should have no problems stretching out inside the Camaro's generously sized cabin with its power-adjustable heated leather seats with grippy suede-like inserts. They'll also appreciate the sounds from the dual-mode exhaust system that becomes freer flowing (and louder) when the driver opens the taps a bit.

Suspension

The ZL1's suspension employs GM's Magnetic Ride Control, which uses special shock dampers that constantly vary the degree of firmness, according to road and driving conditions.

There are also Tour (soft) and Sport (firmer) settings that the driver can dial in. Most of the remaining suspension components have either been strengthened or swapped out.

Pony power

It's your move, Mustang and Challenger. The new Chevrolet Camaro ZL1 has got your number, or more correctly, has beaten your best horsepower numbers ... by a lot.

How does the high-performance ZL1 coupe and convertible square with General Motors' greenification program of introducing fuel-sipping electrics, hybrids plus a couple of new ankle-biter sub-compacts?

Well, the eco trend is definitely here to stay, but at the opposite end of the oil barrel, GM's cornerstone division isn't neglecting its involvement in the muscle/ponycar bracket. Although relatively small, the pedal-to-the-metal gunfighter class remains unequivocal in its No Imports Allowed policy.

And in this club the numero uno bylaw states that horsepower rules and absolute horsepower rules absolutely, or at least until another club member ups the ante and overthrows the leader.

The 2011 edition of the Chevrolet Camaro's SS model was rated at 426 horsepower and was certainly nothing to be sneezed at.

But it couldn't catch a cold next to the Dodge Challenger's SRT8 392 that generated 470 horses from its 6.4-litre "Hemi" V-8 engine. That goes double for Ford Mustang-based Shelby GT500's 550 ponies that emanate from a supercharged 5.4-litre V-8.

With bragging rights on the line, you just had to know that Chevrolet would eventually retaliate.

iQute test

Scion's smart 'city car' lives up to its name

PHOTOS BY WHEELBASE MEDIA

▶ The iQ doesn't weigh all that much, so the 94-horsepower engine feels stronger, relatively speaking.

LISA CALVI
WHEELBASE MEDIA
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

I found a car that doesn't need reverse gear. Really. The start and end points of a day in the Scion iQ were the same, essentially a circle.

All day, I drove, manoeuvred, parked, stopped, started, accelerated and turned.

There were wrong turns, tight turns, U-turns. Reverse gear?

Not even once.

Along a meandering and pretty shore road, my drive partner and I did everything we could to throw our test vehicle into the tightest circles possible.

And both of us giggled uncontrollably every time.

The 2012 Scion iQ has a turning radius of just four metres and in the delicious Hot Lava colour, it matched my Kate Spade bag quite nicely, thank you very much.

Thinking about spending the day in the world's smallest four-seater, I have to admit that I was a little apprehensive since I'm almost six feet tall. Would I have to be pried out of the thing? Would I be sporting bruised temples, ankles, elbows and a pretzeled spine?

First off, it might technically have four seats, but the back is strictly for toddlers and passengers of the canine variety. If I dared suggest any of our three leggy daughters sit back there, I would get dirty looks and plenty of eye-rolling.

We most certainly were not in Alabama in mid-July, but, on our drive day, we were treated to an unseasonably warm day and the world's smallest air-conditioning system handled it with aplomb.

Scion, the youthful offshoot of its Toyota parents, boasts that the iQ, in direct competition with Italian-heartstring-tugging Fiat 500 and Germany's Smart ForTwo, has the flattest gas tank, no thicker than a can of soda and half as thick as standard gas tanks.

▶ The iQ might technically be a four-seater, but the rear space is likely better suited for stuff rather than people.

The "iQute" also has the world's first rear-window airbag, which is proper because if you're in that back seat, you want to know that there's something between grave danger and your head.

I spent equal time in the driver's seat and in the passenger seat of the iQ.

The passenger's side is interesting and innovative. There is no glove box. A drawer that slides out from under the seat takes care of that storage requirement.

On the driver's side, the seat and positioning are comfortable. Enough room for long legs and arms and plenty of head room for those days when my hair is oh-so-'80s.

Acceleration is surprisingly rapid. Although the passing lanes on the winding roads of our driving route were short, the iQ didn't hesitate. It felt confident and sure-footed while enjoying a small spurt of 115 km/h on the highway.

You just have to keep in mind that 94 horsepower is 94 horsepower. The iQ doesn't think it's bigger than it is but, like the ad says, it is bigger than you think.

I like the Scion iQ's micro size yet macro personality.

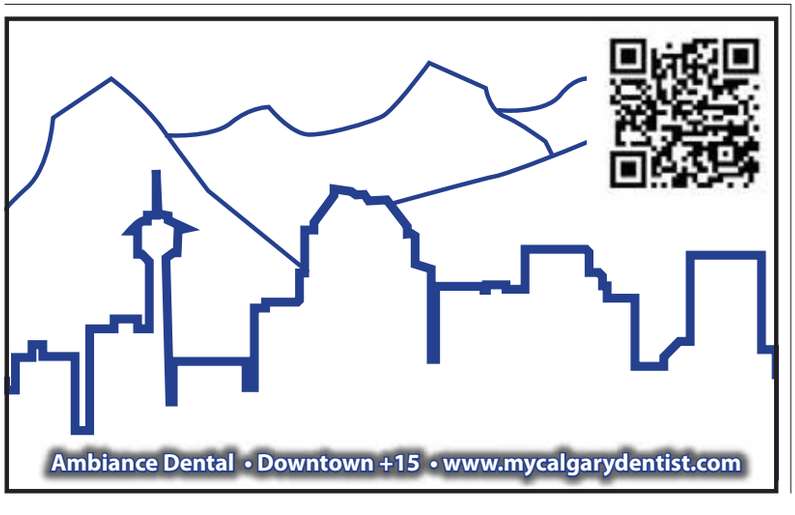
When you're in it, there is no sign of a Napoleon complex.

The iQ is small and proud of it.

I like the way the tires are jauntily pushed out to the edge of the vehicle. I like the smooth seat-gliding levers on either side of the passenger chair.

And, even though I didn't see them, I like the class-leading 11 airbags as well as the great fuel economy.

▶ Which is the accessory?



Scion family

▶ The fun and funky family of Scion cars has been on sale in North America since 2003 and in Canada for the last couple of years. The brand has made an impact, with 800,000 of its cuties roaming the roads. The three siblings of the iQ are the hatchback xD, the boxy but heartwarming xB and the sporty tC two-door coupe.

Hyundai hoping for a Super Bowl victory

Automaker aims to raise brand awareness with five TV spots airing before and during big game broadcast

JUNG YEON-JE/GETTY IMAGES

▶ Pedestrians walk past a Hyundai dealership in Seoul, South Korea last month. The automaker has big plans for its advertising during the upcoming Super Bowl broadcast.

Hyundai Motor Co. is hoping that five television spots before and during the Feb. 5 Super Bowl game will help to bolster its rising brand recognition and continue big sales gains from the past few years.

North American CEO John Krafcik says the fast-growing brand is working on a 60-second spot that will run right before kick-off, plus two ads on the pregame show and two during the first and third quarters of the game.

He wouldn't say how much the Korean automaker is spending on the ads, which will compete with the most creative spots American companies have to offer during one of television's highest-rated and most expensive sporting events.

Last year Super Bowl ads cost companies about $3 million for 30 seconds.

Chrysler Group LLC's two-minute spot featuring rapper Eminem was among those that created the most Super Bowl buzz last year, and it helped kick off what has been a strong sales year for the recovering company.

The cinematic third-quarter ad showed Eminem driving through Detroit and introduced a new car, the Chrysler 200 sedan, amid gritty scenes of the city. A voiceover talked about how the city has survived going through "hell and back."

Krafcik said Hyundai hopes to have standout spots as well, but it will focus more on a brand message rather than going for entertainment value.

"We're competing with Doritos and Pepsi and Anheuser-Busch," he said Friday at an auto show briefing for reporters at a technical centre near Ann Arbor, Mich. "Those are tough competitors from an entertainment point of view."

Hyundai, he said, might have a little more fun with its ads this year and try to make them more memorable than in the past. But it's also trying to sway about a third of the auto market that has a neutral view of the brand, which sells the Elantra compact, Sonata midsize car and Tucson crossover SUV, among other models.

STILL KICKING: STICK SHIFT NOT DEAD YET

AUTO PILOT

MIKE GOETZ
DRIVE
@METRONEWS.CA

"Stick shift" vehicles have been in steady decline. Currently they represent only about five to seven per cent of the North American new-vehicle market.

That steep of a decline could suggest a zero market share might soon be in the cards.

But it appears that the shifter survivor percentage has hardened into a small, dense core, very much willing and prepared to stand its ground — like a cornered groundhog, overly angry and muscled by steroid use. OK bad analogy, but you get my point.

Stick shifts have had four traditional advantages: always cheaper, always more fun, always more fuel efficient, and always more zip (acceleration and top speed). But the new crop of automatic transmissions has turned the tables when it comes to efficiency and zip. Traditional-type automatic transmissions used to have three or four gears. Now they have more gears than most manuals. Chrysler's new automatic has eight.

We're also seeing more use of the Constant Velocity Transmissions (CVT) and the twin-clutch transmission. The former has no gears, and as such, is compact, light, and can be tailored for optimum efficiency. The latter is hard to explain (for me at least), but makes uses of two clutches — one for odd-numbered gears and one for even-numbered gears. It can go from gear to gear in the blink of eye, because the subsequent gear is already "pre-engaged" and only needs a nod from a computer to get busy. They can shift faster than any human hand could, and their speed is increased by the fact that they don't need a suspension of torque to get their shift completed (hence no torque convertor). Twin-clutch transmissions are rapidly becoming the transmission of choice for performance vehicles, even for such racey marques as Ferrari, BMW and Porsche.

CONTRIBUTED

▶ While the all-new 2012 Porsche 911 Carrera will feature one of the world's most sophisticated twin-clutch automatic transmissions, it will also continue to embrace the "stick shift" religion — this time with the world's first seven-speed manual.

"Our take rate on manual transmissions is way down," says Laurance Yap, director of marketing, Porsche Cars Canada. He adds that, ironically, Europeans are leading the way with automatic transmissions. Europeans have historically snubbed their noses at lazy automatics, but they have fallen in love with the sportier "twin clutch" design. Across the 911 model line in Germany, for example, Yap notes that 75 to 80 per cent are sold with PDK. (PDK is a short form for the official name of the company's twin clutch — Porsche Doppelkupplung. Just try saying that correctly in German without hurting yourself.)

The Canadian "take rake" for 911 models with PDK is only 50 per cent. Go figure: we like manual transmissions more than the Autobahn enabled Germans.

Which brings us back to our angry groundhog.

Manual transmissions will continue to have a life, even in this era where they are technologically trumped, because they are simply more engaging and fun for a certain tribe of driver. The Cadillac CTS-V and the upcoming Mazda MX-5 are two examples of new vehicles that are making "statements" by offering a manual transmission — they are signalling that they are ready to emotionally engage a driver so inclined.

Actually, as vehicles become increasingly sophisticated and computerized, the manual transmission will have an increasing important role — to regain some of that lost emotional connection to the mechanical beast within.

Carbon clogging can cost you at the pumps

Just like the arteries in your body, the workings of an engine can get blocked

DRIVING FORCE

JIL McINTOSH
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

FORD

▶ Folks, this is what a fuel injector in action looks like.

Engines work when gasoline enters a combustion chamber, where it's ignited by a spark plug to extract its energy. The gasoline is sprayed in by fuel injectors, and the engine's efficiency depends heavily on these injectors performing at their peak. This includes how clean the injectors are.

"Carbon can clog the injectors and the spray pattern, and the efficiency of the fuel is impeded," says Al Manji, managing director of MOC Distributors of Canada, a provider of chemicals and induction service for cleaning injectors.

"Carbon is like a resistance substance in the car that makes it work harder. It's like clogged arteries where the car isn't 'breathing' or functioning as it should."

Carbon is a by-product of fuel combustion, and over time, it can build up on the injectors and on the back of the throttle plate.

This can mean small quantities of unburned gasoline left in the combustion chamber, which reduces the car's fuel efficiency.

Injectors have specific spray patterns to ensure that fuel is sent to the optimum area within the combustion chamber for maximum efficiency, but if the injector tip is clogged with carbon, "it's like taking the tip of a garden hose and putting your thumb over it," Manji says.

"Fuel doesn't go into the spray pattern that it should. It causes hot spots, it sometimes causes pooling of fuel, and the fuel ends up dripping out of the injectors instead of being sprayed out. Any time that spray pattern is inhibited in any way, the car ends up suffering downstream."

If the injectors get too clogged, the engine could use more fuel, misfire or even stall, Manji says.

Computer-controlled engine management systems are very finely tuned and can be altered by carbon build-up, which in turn results in the engine running poorly.

Some engines use direct fuel injection, which sprays the fuel directly into the combustion chamber to be ignited by the spark plug.

"It's more efficient, but the spray patterns are much finer, the (fuel pressure) is much higher, and the need for a cleaner-running system is that much more important," Manji says.

"If it's not running optimally, it can cause some serious issues in the system as well."

Final-gen GM minivans should offer reliability

SECOND GEAR

JUSTIN PRITCHARD
DRIVE@METRONEWS.CA

For many shoppers, the minivan delivers the ultimate in bang-for-the-buck when it comes to moving a family around.

At General Motors, the Chevrolet Uplander and Pontiac Montana SV6 were the most recent offerings to the minivan-seeking masses.

Though cosmetically different, the underlying hardware in the Uplander and Montana were basically identical.

The following information, therefore, applies to both.

2005 to 2009 Pontiac Montana/Chevrolet Uplander

▶ 2005 Pontiac Montana SV6

Engine

Power came from one of two V-6 engines: a 3.5-litre with 200 horsepower, or a 3.9-litre with 240. A four-speed automatic transmission was standard and All Wheel Drive was available.

What owners like

Most owners report a comfortable highway ride, smooth performance, plenty of interior space and a flexible cargo and passenger compartment layout. Gas mileage is rated strongly, relatively speaking.

What owners dislike

Complaints tend to include interior squeaking, rattling and trim wear as the vehicles age, as well as bland and uninspired styling.

Common issues

Problems stated with the newer GM minivan powerplants seem few and far between — and are mainly sensor related. If the engine and transmission's service requirements have been adhered to, if it runs smoothly and if no "check engine" lights are illuminated, you're well on your way. Be sure to "feel" for any transmission slipping — and avoid any model that exhibits it.

Avoid models with power sliding doors. These can be an expensive hassle when they fail.

Verdict

A well-maintained Uplander or Montana should be a machine from which owners can expect solid powertrain reliability, plenty of space and affordable pricing in the used market.

♑ Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 20 Don't waste time on tasks that can be done with your brain stuck in neutral. Be bold and brilliant.

♒ Aquarius Jan. 21-Feb. 18 What you start over the next two or three days will bring great success in the very near future.

♓ Pisces Feb. 19-March 20. It'll be easy to lose your sense of perspective in the next 24 hours. Control emotions. SALLY BROMPTON
